A LITTLE BIT ABOUT THE ARTIST...

A native Ohio artist, Teresa Satola-Coey is internationally known for her inspired religious art of saints and angels depicted with the majesty of heavenly wonder. She has conducted art classes for the University of Maryland, Western Maryland College and Catonsville Community College. After 17 years, she ended her tenure as artist in residence at Wagnalls Memorial Library in Lithopolis, OH. Teresa also designs and creates Christmas cards, original art, rubber stamps and works on private commissions in her studio in Ellijay, Georgia.

Teresa received a B. F. A in theatre costume and set design from Ohio University. She also studied portraiture and art at the renowned Schuler School of Art in Baltimore, MD. There she learned the techniques of the "Old Masters", such as grinding pigment and making the oil medium. For each oil painting, she uses the Maroger medium and does what is known as an "Umber Drawing", or under painting as its first layer. The "Umber Drawing" gives more depth to the picture and the umber color enhances every skin tone.

Teresa's love of costume is evident with her attention to historic detail when doing period pieces. While still in college, she was privileged to work with Leonard Nimoy during a production of "Twelfth Night". Teresa has done costume work for Annette Funicello and Disney Studio Dolls.

SACRED ART

In 1997 she debuted her paintings of St. Thérèse in New York City at the Catholic Museum of Art and History at Rockefeller Center. Teresa was also privileged to have her picture of St. Thérèse, With A Rose, adopted by the National Shrine of the Little Flower in Darien, Illinois for the Saint's 1998 Feast Day prayer card.
